Lets say I want to find out if a string matches the "onclick" property for an asp:button element. So I'd do something like the following: // result is a string if(result.Contains("onclick=*")) { // do something } This code works perfectly fine because the.aspx code is loaded and executed prior to executing my script. But I was wondering if, in the case of a check, this was the case for the code? Lets say I wanted to do something like the following: private void Page_Load(object sender, EventArgs e) { // result is a string if(result.Contains("onclick=*")) { // do something } } In this case, when the page loads, it's not going to be a string, so it's going to throw an error and I can easily fix it using a try-catch block: private void Page_Load(object sender, EventArgs e) { try { // result is a string if(result.Contains("onclick=*")) { // do something } } catch { // do something } }
